

not really a guessing Game as, What is It?

Posted by Nobleco - 14 Dec 2009 23:12

I was given this Mud/Cement Mixer by a friend the other day. I took it out to the garage and ran the barrel thru my glass bead blaster. This is what came out. You can see from the rest of the model, what condition it was in. I will clean up the rest but am interested in whether anyone knows where it came from. I has a pencil shapener in the bottom. Probably just a novelty item. I think it is copper and diecast metal. Most of the carriage should be copper as well. I don't think Brass or Bronze goes green like this.

=====

Re:not really a guessing Game as, What is It?

Posted by RVREVO - 15 Dec 2009 05:04

wow, how big is this?

=====

Re:not really a guessing Game as, What is It?

Posted by Nobleco - 15 Dec 2009 12:31

Sorry, I should have said this earlier. It is 3 inches long, 1 1/2 inches across the wheels and about 2 1/2 inches tall. I will be cleaning up the rest of it today. I have the pin to hold the barrel on but it is broken off and is somewhere in the car. LOL. I think it would have had some fins or vains inside the drum, but not sure. The post sticks up a long way. I also think there is a small piece missing on the right of the barrel to stabilize it.

=====

Re:not really a guessing Game as, What is It?

Posted by RVREVO - 15 Dec 2009 13:29

I would say an early Moko, but its way too bulky.

=====

Re:not really a guessing Game as, What is It?

Posted by Nobleco - 15 Dec 2009 23:15

I would say more souvenir or dime store item. Couple of bucks maybe.

=====

Re:not really a guessing Game as, What is It?

Posted by GunnerJim - 16 Dec 2009 04:20

Muller cement mixer pencil sharpener don't know who made them.

=====

Re:not really a guessing Game as, What is It?

Posted by Nobleco - 17 Dec 2009 01:42

Muller? don't know that name. Is that a cement mixer name? or a manufacturer?

=====